

Dr. Elaine McLevie, dean of communication arts at Grossmont College, is one of 100 women managers chosen from throughout the country to participate in a leadership training program financed through a grant from the Fund for Improvement of Postsecondary Education. The program, "Leaders for the '80s," is designed to assist community college women to assume policymaking positions during the decade. The League for Innovation in Community Colleges, a consortium of 17 community college districts in the nation, is sponsoring the project with the American Association of Women in Community and Junior Colleges.
